Though India can never take the place of the South as the leading cotton produ-eer of the world, she will yet for some time be able to stand a vigorous competi-tion. It is said that there are forty miltion. It is said that there are forty million acres of land in Central India suited to the cultivation of cotton, yet unimproved. The facilities for transportation have heretofore been very poor, so that the cost of marketing an exporting commodity was enormed. The India staple is so inferior that it cannot wholly supersede American cotton. Of late years the former has been used to great alvantage in the woof or filling, the inter being exclusively used over all the world for the warp. A certain quantity of India cottons under high prices will always be in demand, the exact proportion to the whole consumption being determined by the range of values. Before the war nine bags of American cotton were used to one of all other descriptions. From this we may infer that no very great reduction from Egyptian staple makes the nearest approach, while Brazilian is of fair quality. The former country has been a section producer for fifty years. In 1855 she exported 115,000 tales of 250 pounds each, Last year she furnished 256,000, against 251,000 the previous season. Even under the stimulus of high prices her exports only reached 254,000 bales, and that crop was followed by a desoluting familie, by which one inhabitant died for every bale of cotton produced. The strip of country along the Mile must support the whole population, and no more land can be apared from breadstuffs. The imports into Liverpool from that country up to into Liverpool from that country up to lonedale. spared from breadstails. The imports into Liverpool from that country up to the 20th of April this year show a falling off of 6700 bales, or about nine per cent.

Savage. The following year she furnished Europe only 684,000 bales; and from the lat January to 29th April, this season, the imports of Brazil cotton into Liverpoul show a raduction of 42,000 bales, or about 25 per cent. The condition of Brazil is not such as to enable her to sustain sharp compe-tition and lower prices.

So far as the South is concerned, then, the future is fu'l of hope, and as she advances in production other sources of supply will be enfeebled; and the steadily increasing consumption of the world beckons her on to a richer position than she has ever held. The future cotton producer of the globe will be wealthy beyond calculation. The power of steam has lent new wings to commerce, and the thousand million inhabitants of the globe are becoming rapidly united in the bonds of mutual dependence. The great haws of political economy will soon have untrammeled sway. That country whose advantages make it the producer of the staple which is to clothe this mass of human beings, has indeed an enviable station. It is a noteworthy fact, that the last quarter of a century has opened the commerce of the great tropical countries awarming with inhabitants who require cotton goods.

consumption for the entire world was about 75 cents. In 1857 the value of the price goods shipped from England to India was £14,350,000, or nearly one-half the value of the total product of the world lifteen years ago. The United States annually consumes $130,000,000 worth of cotton goods. We may reasonably expect that the per capital consumption of the world, in two or three decades, will be $2 50, which would require manufacture.

weight of a bale in 1860 was 425 pounds, while last year it was only 350. America and Europe consumed last year about 4,000,000 bales of 500 pounds weight, of which the South furnished 2,200,000, and other countries 1,800,000. For the season of 1808-70, from present appearances, the lotal production will be 4,500,000 bales of 500 pounds, of which 2,900,000 will come from the South, and 1,800,000 from other sources. News from the interior is to the effect that planting is being pushed forward with all possible dispatch. The weather has been clear and hot during the week, and rain, which is much wanted in some localities, has not disturbed the planters' industry. Cotton generally looks well, and promises a large yield owing to the increased acreage planted. In many sections, we are sorry to learn, the corn crop is to be neglected, and less than enough raised to supply the most pressing wants of the farmer.

Cotton of last year's crop continues to come in freely, and from arrivals during the week indicates a considerable amount yet in the interior. Receipis by the Louisville Railroad are almost double what they were at this time last year, while

For the warp, or extended threads, strength and length of fibre are especially requisite. A document read before the Manchester Chamber of Commerce in 1855 gave the value of cotton manufactures consumed in the world as £120,000,000, or February 1850,000,000,000. the world, in two or three decates, will be $2.50, which would require manufactured goods to the value of $2.000,000,000.

Last year the consumption of Europe was 4,60,000 bales, against 4,258,000 in 1850-1, of which America supplied f.422,000. Let it not be inferred from this that the world's supply was greater last year than prior to the war, for the average
